

Diana Keough, Co-Founder & Editor-in-Chief, is a former medical reporter for The (Cleveland) Plain Dealer. While at the paper, she garnered a Pulitzer nomination and an armful of national, regional and local awards for the numerous high impact, front-page and multi-day series, as well as for the breaking news stories she wrote. Before joining the paper full-time, Diana's work appeared regularly in The Christian Science Monitor, Reader's Digest, Beliefnet.com and Living Without, a national healthcare publication. She also wrote book reviews for two popular sites, The Book Reporter and faithfulreader.com. Diana also worked as a reporter and commentator for National Public Radio and as a TV news analyst on the Emmy-nominated PBS's NewsNight Akron. Diana is also an instructor of journalism at Emory University, as well as a popular speaker at women's conferences. She holds the rare honor of being one of the few journalists to have won national awards for her work in print and radio. Contact her at Diana@ShareWIK.com
