

Scott Peacocke is currently the Digital Enterprise Projects editor for the Atlanta Journal-Constitution.

He has been at the newspaper for the past 25 years, and has seen it transition from an exclusively print product into multiple digital platforms.

After 15 years in various editor roles within the news and sports departments, he moved into the AJC's digital department in 2004 as the sports digital manager for ajc.com.

In 2009, he became the manager for breaking news. This group focused heavily on delivering news content to the AJC's internet audience, via ajc.com and social media.

He has also served as interim manager for the digital department, overseeing all aspects of the AJC's digital content and platforms.